

CHARLIE

English Literature and Creative Writing Graduate

Hi everyone, my name's Charlie! When I finished school, I joined my school's sixth form and completed my A levels. I struggled with this transition as a lot was going on in my personal life and it felt really overwhelming. Because of this, I had to retake my english lit exam to get what I needed to get to uni, which was a real dream of mine and made me work extra hard to get where I wanted to be.

During my study breaks and after school, as a means to escape, I began to write stories in my free time, alongside reading lots of fiction. I knew that was something I enjoyed, but would also love to study.

And I loved studying it at uni! I felt like I belonged and could share my passion for books and stories with other like-minded people. I still write and read in my free time. As a job, I work in education, but I'm always the first person to have a go writing stuff. If you like to read, why not check out the 'University Insiders' blog?!
